Dr Fiona Wagg is a Child and Adolescent Psychiatrist with 20 years’ experience in the field, who throughout her career, has worked with young people with anorexia nervosa and their families.

In collaboration with Dr Michelle Williams, Paediatrician, Dr Wagg set up the Hobart Eating Disorder Service for young people under 18 years of age. This service offers integrated inpatient, community and clinic care in collaboration with Paediatric and Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services.

The Hobart Eating Disorder Service includes a nurse-run outpatient clinic accessible five days per week, which is a crucial and cost-effective resource in supporting young people and their families.

The service has reduced the length of stay of inpatient care, effectively supported the care of young people and their families in the community, and improved local outcomes for this disorder.
